

If you've been impacted by the economic crisis caused by COVID-19, you're not alone. Starting in April, many Americans will receive stimulus payments from the federal government over the next few months to help make ends meet.

Read more about economic impacts payments here, or check out the below answers to frequently asked questions:

1. Do I qualify for an economic impact payment?

If your adjusted gross income is $99,000 or less as a single tax filer or $198,000 or less as a married joint filer, you qualify for a payment. Social Security recipients and railroad retirees are also eligible.

2. How much will my payment be?

It depends. Individual tax filers with adjusted gross income up to $75,000 a year will receive $1,200, while married couples filing jointly who earn up to $150,000 will receive $2,400. Filers with income above these amounts will receive payments that are reduced by $5 for each $100 above the $75,000/$150,000 thresholds. You'll get up to $500 for each qualifying child.

3. Do I have to apply for a payment?

No. If eligible, the federal government will automatically send you the money.

4. How will I get my payment?

If you received your 2018 or 2019 tax return via direct deposit, the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) will send your payment via direct deposit to that account.

5. What about my taxes?

The IRS will use your most recent tax return to determine your annual income and economic impact payment amount (as well as your direct deposit information or mailing address). If you've already filed your 2019 taxes, you're all set. Haven't filed? Even though the filing deadline has been extended to July, now is a good time to file so the IRS has your most current information.
